

Shopfloor Management

Shopfloor Management makes it possible to improve quality, increase production efficiency, reduce delivery times and more.

Description

Shopfloor Management is derived from Japanese Lean Manufacturing Concepts, such as the well-known Toyota Production System. Aimed at increasing efficiency in solving operational problems, the approach of Shopfloor Management, is based on a combination of different methods, behaviors and working tools of surprising simplicity. If applied on a daily base, any organization could create a new working culture that can make enormous differences in operational results.

Benefits can be: improved quality, increased production efficiency, reduced delivery times, reduced costs, minimized waste, and more.

The key point is that it is people who have to adopt new behaviors and working methods, and maintain them on a daily basis. That means the ongoing commitment of every employee (managers in particular) throughout the organization is essential.
